About the State

Not before in years has the price of hay, eggs, butter, potatoes and onions in Middlebury been so low as at this season of the year. Through this section as they are at the present time. Number one hay can be bought for $12 a ton, eggs for 23 cents a dozen, which is a drop in price of 20 cents during the last month. Butter can be bought for 22 cents a pound.

George Bloomstrand, employed by the Chester Lumber company at Chester Depot, was badly injured last week while trying to save a fellow workman from an accident. In trying to stop the running of the long chain used in hauling logs into the mill, his hand was caught between the chain and the drum over which it runs, breaking his right arm in two places and otherwise cutting him about the head.

What came near being a serious accident, occurred a few days ago in Cambridgeport, when a number of children were cutting. Marshall Bashan came down the hill just as a team passed the turn. The hill was so icy it was impossible to stop or turn the sled, and he went under the wagon, both wheels passing over his neck. Although the little fellow is very painfully injured, his condition is not considered serious.

For cutting the thick iron plates used in the construction of the side walls of the Clement National bank of Rutland, a unique machine is used. The outfit, known as "The Autogenous welding equipment," consists of a metal tip in which oxygen and acetylene from separate tanks unite and form an intense heat. When the iron has become thoroughly heated, a stream of oxygen is turned into the cutter and the metal dies before it as does sawdust from a circular saw.

Mrs. A. C. Cuneo of Wilmington has entered upon a novel endurance test, and for a friendly wager will undertake to eat one broiled quail a day for luncheon for 30 days. If she succeeds she will win $200 on a bet. It was said that anyone would soon tire of the same kind of diet and that it would be impossible to keep it up on account of the aversion formed, but she thinks she will be able to do it. On week days she will eat the quail at a cafe and on Sunday at her home, where the man who made the wager will be a guest.

Mrs. J. E. Haywood of Brattleboro has a very interesting collection of pitchers from almost every country in the world. She has spent 30 years in getting the pottery together, a copper bronze specimen, one of the last made in the old Bennington pottery being the beginning of the collection, which now numbers 265. Practically every kind of a pitcher may be found here, the smallest specimen being only large enough to hold half a teaspoonful. It is of metal and is kept in a tiny box used originally to hold a woman's ring. The pitcher was bottle, used by the pupils of the island to carry water to school, is an ingenious bit of pottery and its high coloring attracts the eye.

5,000 Bottles of Catsup Spilled.
Nearly 5,000 bottles of catsup were broken and the contents spilled at the car dumping ground in Burlington Friday, when United States Marshal Lloyd W. Bailey took the last step in the formalities necessary for the condemnation by the government of the catsup. In order of the federal pure food laws. In order of the destruction of the catsup, Marshal Bailey served the first writ of destruction which has come into the marshal's office during his administration.

The consignee of catsup consigned of 188 cases addressed to Spaulding & Kimball of Burlington sent to them by a preserving concern in Ohio. The stuff was seized by the department of justice in November and after all the legal formalities had been gone through it was condemned and ordered destroyed by the United States court for the district of Vermont. Each case contained two dozen bottles of catsup.

BROKE FAITH WITH COURT

By Getting Drunk and Having More Drinkables On His Person.

Rutland, Jan. 30.—W. F. McKenna, Jr., who last May took the pledge in city court, when a first offense intoxication sentence was suspended, broke faith with the court Friday and the police found him in a much intoxicated condition. A pint and a half of whiskey which he had in his possession showed that he intended to further shatter the pledge he had taken.

The court was inclined to be very severe with the respondent for his failure to keep his word but Grand Juror C. B. Costello found a reason for interceding for McKenna and the man was allowed to go after paying a fine for Saturday's offense and the old one too, $25.00 in all, no prison sentence being imposed.

ENGINE RAN AWAY

And Dived Into Turntable Pit at Rutland Saturday.

Rutland, Jan. 30.—Passenger engine 2045 of the Rutland railroad took a start after she came in with the sleeper from the south early Saturday and had been left at the engine house in the yard to "cool up," made for the turntable and dived into its depths. No one knows why she did it but it is said that locomotives sometimes do such things.

The engine was found there about 3:30 o'clock by the night "hostler" and the combined efforts of 15 men were required to rescue her from the pit at 12 o'clock yesterday. The engine is one of the new ones of heavy type, but was not greatly damaged.

URGE "HUSH" POLICY.

Some Rutland Business Men on the Typhoid Epidemic.

Rutland, Jan. 30.—A petition is being circulated among Rutland business men which is to be presented to the daily newspapers asking that they refrain from unnecessary references in the future to the pollution of city water and the typhoid epidemic. The petition already bears the signature of a majority of the merchants in the city and it has not yet been presented to all.

It is claimed that men interested in the welfare of the city were the instigators of the paper. Several merchants in the water supply should receive attention, believed that the publicity given the situation has done much to hurt the city's business and that public sentiment is already sufficiently aroused to the need of cleaning up the water source.

Only one or two of those already asked to sign the documents have refused to do so. In pointing out the detriment of the typhoid epidemic merchants say that traveling men who usually spend Sunday in Rutland now go on to Burlington on the north or Belows Falls or some other point south rather than spend the time in this city.

WATERBURY MAN TOOK CARBOLIC

Fred Luce, Aged 40, Killed Himself Saturday—No Cause for Act Is Known, It Is Said.

Waterbury, Jan. 30.—Fred Luce, aged about 40 years, committed suicide Saturday morning by drinking carbolic acid at the Jones farm on Gregg hill, near Waterbury Center. No cause is known for the act.

Luce has been employed on the farm many years and went out Saturday morning as usual to do the work about the barns. After finishing at one he told his wife he would be in for breakfast after doing the chores at the other barn. He failed to appear and after some time she went out and found him in the corn barn. His head was on a bag of grain and he was unconscious, though Mrs. Luce said he opened his eyes as she entered.

Dr. F. E. Steele, Jr., was called from this village and the selection were also summoned, but he was beyond help.

He is survived by his wife and a son by a former wife, the boy living in Boston. The funeral was held today at 1 o'clock from his home and burial was in the cemetery here, Rev. J. Q. Angell of Stowe officiating.

BURNS CELEBRATION.

Clan MacGregor of Quincy and Ladies Held Observance.

Quincy, Mass., Jan. 30.—The celebration of the birthday of Robert Burns at music hall Friday evening by Loyal ladies of Clan MacGregor, No. 1, and Clan MacGregor, No. 5, S. S. W. C. of the most successful events of the kind ever held in this city.

The supper was excellent in every particular, and the concert was fine. The singing of Miss Evelyn Blair and Mr. D. P. Wilson, and the dancing of Misses Eva White and Lois LaBud was well received.

The orator of the evening, Rev. A. D. MacKinnon, surpassed himself, and that is saying a great deal. Mr. MacKinnon showed very clearly that he was a student of the works of Robert Burns, and that he was fully in sympathy with his theme.

Music hall was taxed to the limit, about five hundred and fifty people were seated at supper, which was served about 8:45 o'clock. The concert commenced about 9:45 and after the concert was over the hall was cleared for dancing.

Two hundred and seventy-five couples participated in the grand march, which was led by Chief Alfred O. Diack, chief of Clan MacGregor, and Mrs. Margaret Stronach, president of Loyal Ladies, No. 1. The door director was Alex. W. Russell, and the door directress, Mrs. Josie Daw, who were assisted by an able corps of aids.

A large number of the clansmen wore their plaids, the bright colors of the MacGregor tartan and the many pretty dresses worn by the ladies adding picturesqueness to the scene.

The committee in charge deserve credit for the excellent entertainment offered, and have set a high mark for Burns' entertainments.

REAL WILD HORSES.

They Roam Over the Gobi Desert in Southern Mongolia.

It was the Russian explorer, Prjevalsky, who discovered a new and quite distinct wild horse in the Gobi desert, to the south of Mongolia. Although evidence existed that wild horses were probably as abundant in the prehistoric times in the south of Europe as zebras are to-day in British East Africa, most naturalists believed that true wild horses with an unbroken line of wild ancestry were extinct. Hence great interest was felt in Prjevalsky's discovery. Later the brothers Grun-Grimaldo saw the horses in the desert and learned new facts about them.

The Russians decided to capture a number of the animals and take them to Europe. Their efforts were successful, and several years ago a herd of about thirty of the Prjevalsky horses, after much trouble, were landed in Europe. Most of them are still in Russia, but a few were taken to England, where they are kept on the estate of the duke of Bedford.

The English naturalists did not make a scientific study of the animals in that country because the Russians have had a most thorough investigation in progress, with the advantage that nearly all the captive horses and a number of skeletons are in their hands. Very few of the English naturalists believed that they were true wild horses, but looked upon them either as a kiang, hybrid—the kiang being a species of ass—or as the offspring of escaped Mongol ponies.

The Russians, however, appeared to have settled the question. They have proved, it is claimed, by the methods of comparative anatomy and in other ways that the Prjevalsky horse has no relationship with Mongol species or the kiang, but is a valid and distinct species of the genus horse, without relationship to the ass, although it has some features that remind one of the Asiatic ass; but even in these features, as the tail, for example, the resemblance is closer to the horse than to the ass.

The animals were mere colts when they arrived in Europe, and not prepossessing, for they did not take kindly to the novel surroundings, were out of condition, and had ragged coats and awkward gait. They have now reached maturity, have been well cared for, and are good looking animals.

Many naturalists hold the opinion that the domestic horse of today was mainly derived from three wild species, which have been named the steppe, forest and plateau varieties. The Prjevalsky horse is a representative of the steppe variety.

The brothers Grun-Grimaldo, who have had the best opportunity to observe this horse in its wild state, say that it lives in the level districts and goes at night to the pasture lands and drinking places. At break of day it returns to the desert, where it rests until sunset.

When there are storms colts in the herd of the animals always rest in the same place, but this does not appear to be the case when the foals become larger.

They usually walk one behind the other, so that the region where they live is covered with deep tracks.

They neigh clearly, and the sound is exactly like the neigh of the domestic horse. There is the same resemblance between the snorting of a badly frightened wild horse and that of domestic horses when scared.

The Mongolians have made many attempts to tame the wild horses, but in vain. All efforts to tame the animals that have been taken to Europe have also failed. Thus far the horse will not submit to man, is afraid of him, and cannot be rendered servicable. Although now accustomed to the sight of human beings, the captives are very badly frightened if a person approaches nearer than two or three rods to them.—Scientific American.

It Had to Come.

The Vergennes Enterprise and Vermonter is the first newspaper this year to announce the removal of the state capital from Montpelier to Burlington. Of course this thing is to be expected, once in two years, during the biennial session of the legislature, but in view of the extended session it was a reasonable hope that the long suffering people would be spared this time.

However, the always worthy contemporary has seen fit to pull off this biennial newspaper moving day, although there are a lot more important subjects for discussion. Therefore, it may be concluded that the esteemed neighbor, always for the dear people and the American eagle, "sees its duty and did it." Let it go at that.

But there are one or two points of deep concern that the contemporary should hasten to explain. It commends the proposition for turning down the legislature to build a needed addition to the State House at $250,000 and says that a new modern capitol building could be erected at Burlington for very little more cost to the state. Evidently The Enterprise has solved the problem of the high cost of living so far as building State Houses is concerned. But does the Enterprise really suppose that less than a million dollars would construct a satisfactory capitol building?

But there is more. The Vergennes building committee's argument. It calls the present capitol a "death trap," and as proof thereof cites the fact of the death of one member of the present legislature. The gentleman died of heart disease, to which he had been subject for some time, and no one has before even suspected that the state building was responsible for the sad occurrence. It also says that over fifty members have been sickly ill. This is another bit of exclusive news from Vergennes.

When its new capitol is completed, the neighbor suggests using the present building for a state library, supreme court rooms and a central normal school. Why does the ancient city contemporary wish to house these worthy institutions in a building which it calls a "death trap"? Is that the way to treat the supreme court? Is that the way to encourage the ambitious school mar'm intent upon learning how to teach the young idea to shoot?—Northfield News.
